

CAROLYN R. WILSON

Biographical Summary

Carolyn Wilson is a lecturer at Boston College, co-founder and CEO of NavAcc LLC, and author with her husband, Pete, of Navigating Accounting[®], a multimedia website that provides a foundation for understanding, preparing, and using accounting information. Its content seeks to integrate accounting research, teaching, and practice; procedural and conceptual skills; and the interplay between a reporting entity's business and accounting decisions and decisions by users of its accounting reports.

Carolyn, with her husband, Pete, has given numerous speeches, webinars, and workshops on flipping the classroom, peer instruction, using technology to free up time for critical thinking, incorporating judgment in the curriculum, and as a member of the Pathways Commission Vision committee, presenting the Vision for Accounting Education, recipient of 2014 American Accounting Association's Innovation in Accounting Education Award.

Carolyn has held numerous senior management positions. Her corporate experience at Hewlett-Packard and Agilent Technologies includes leadership roles in accounting – financial and managerial reporting; sales and marketing; service; quality; and business development. In these positions, Carolyn was recognized for her success in building global teams, leveraging broad business experiences, and deploying innovative approaches to increase revenue, profit, and customer satisfaction. To her role as author, Carolyn also brings her entrepreneurial experience at an early-stage start-up web-based software company, Aanza, Inc., and her classroom experience as an elementary-school teacher.

Carolyn received a Master of Science in Industrial Administration (MBA) from Carnegie-Mellon University with a focus on finance and technology, BA in Education from the University of South Florida, and AA from Lake-Sumter Community College.
